

Second half reflection

Learning Reflection (Second Half)

Starting at the second half of the course, the lessons became more interesting as this was basically using everything that we have learned in a practical manner. By being able to learn these things it will be quite beneficial for me as this could lead to new confidence, especially for me I am not open with the things that I do to public even if it is skills that is worth praises. This course kind of gave me the confidence to be able to show others what I can do and what I cannot do, which is a sign that I can improve more on the things that I do.

Comparing the me now and the me in the past I think that I am gradually exploring my self and immersing to deep ends of my life and finding bits and pieces of who I can be and who I might be.

The video that Ajarn gave us to create a video of our hobby gave me knowledge of how to basically create my own content in an online platform for others to look at and learn from me (I kind of didn't follow the structure of the video that was given; I didn't put a hook as this will actually make my video longer and because of the limit of not exceeding 5 minutes I kind of did not put it). Since the time that Ajarn gave us the project of making a video I tried my best to make a scene that would act as a hook proxy and that would hook audiences to keep watching my video.

I also had fun drawing and uploading my artwork in reddit, but it seems only few people commented on the post and what broke my heart the most is that only 1 upvoted my artwork 😞, and since the comments that was commented in my post was quite positive I kind of didn't mind it later on.

Overall, I had fun making the drawings for the video and of course editing it while laughing all over the video with my roommate Jon. I feel blessed to have a fun environment to grow and learn English and learn about life, as what we are learning in this course is authentic learning which can be used in real life.
